review 1: Many consumers like myself aren't knowledgeable about the mechanism behind the prices of our purchases. Kaufman does an excellent job of revealing to his readers how our food (grain in particular) ends up at the price we find it at. While he does not offer a solid answer to the issue of world hunger or the commodity indexes, the reader is left curious enough to explore further.

Our souls need God, rely on God, are nourished only by God. So it is only when we see life as the widow does, when we bet the farm on God, that we have any hope at all of the kingdom of heaven. The second we reach rock bottom and really understand this is the moment of transformation. We give up our last morsel of food.
