In One Piece, it's subtly implied that the further a pirate goes down the Grand Line, a cornucopia of crazy phenomena, (Don Krieg says that Devil Powers like Luffy's are commonplace, for one thing) the more desensitized one gets. On Whole Cake Island, Nami freaks out when she sees a giant talking crocodile. Luffy points out that she shouldn't be shocked by that point, as they had just left an ...

This is a brief lesson in history about fear and ignorance of extreme weather 500 years ago. Now, as impossible as it is to comprehend events in the 20 th century without understanding totalitarianism, it is likewise impossible to understand Europe's 16 th century without recognizing the role of superstition. Magic, witchcraft, sorcery and superstition pervaded every scale of culture from ...

The Satellite Orbital Weapon in AKIRA, while working pretty well on any non-psychics, becomes this when used on Tetsuo. It destroys his arm on its first hit, but succeeds only at making him angry thereafter. In the manga, keeping it from being fired again and pissing him off further is a bit of a plot point and eventually it does manage to piss him off enough that he goes and knocks it out of ...
